Weekes, Rudolph - Headmaster

April 8, 2015

Letter to the Class of 2015,

It is with great pride and powerful emotions that I address the first full, four-year graduating class of West Roxbury Academy. You helped us to defy the odds, to stand courageous and unwavering in demonstrating our significance and our place in the educational community of the Boston Public Schools. This letter is a thank you to the class leaders of 600 students from 12 neighborhoods in Boston who took multiple forms of transit, traveling half way across the city each day to form a dynamic community on the edge of a "swamp." This letter speaks to what is possible for all Boston students who when provided with more than just assessments, stand tall from an education focused on college, careers, and community service. You found your voice and became citizens of Boston, making it an even stronger city.

This letter is in recognition of all the hard work you performed over four years, for your concentration over ten months, six-and-a-half hours per day in classes increasingly more difficult. This letter is to honor you who sat for the MCAS and the SAT, who completed the college application process, and who completed all of the tests and quizzes that have gotten you to this point. I urge you to reflect on what it took you to get here, on the hard work of a teaching staff that tried every day to support you in various ways, on the hard work of your parents who might have been frustrated at times but who kept the faith and urged you forward.

I want you to know how impressed I am with what you have accomplished as you head off to Syracuse, Boston College, Salem State University, the University of Massachusetts schools, and many other two- and four-year institutions of higher learning. I will remember you fondly for your strong characters and engaging personalities. We shared laughter at assemblies, cheered our Raiders at sporting events, and now we celebrate together, the passing of a torch. It is with great pleasure and pride to call you our "graduates." Congratulations class of 2015.

All the best,
